CHARLESTON.

Population is wealth, and healthy muscle the main prop of society. While the second, the first and the fourth estate are all essential to the wellbeing of the body politic, they are mere drones as compared with the third estate, the bone and sinew of the land, the laboring class. The producer is the true Atlas who supports the world. We claim no originality for these views, well aware that they are as old as society, and cooval with reason. But truchs, because of their vory familiarity, are often undervalued, or allowed to pass by unheeded, and t is salutary on occasions to seize the file and scrape off the rust of age, and realize for ourselves that ideas are not worthless, simply because they

For centuries the negro has been the agricultural laborer of these States. True, there have been minent broker some weeks ago is said to have led all along white operatives also, both on their own account and in the employment of others, but in the sum total of the working population of the Southern States, the latter merely represented an unappreciable fraction. While the white race filled all the varied positions in life, the negro, nearly equ lling it in number—in some States the preponderating element—was almost exclusively engaged in tilling the soil. This was considered his special vo ation; he was admirably adapted for it, and did his work well. By his labor these States attained a proud pre-eminence among the nations of the earth as the producers of several valuable staples, which, from long use, have become indispensable to the civilized world. The cetton, sugar, rice and tobacco, the very props of the world's commerce, were the products almost exclusively of negro labor. The system had been brought to great perfection, and the autocrats of trade at distant centres could count with all but certainty on the extent of a Southern crop of cotton or tobacco; the prepitiousness of the season being the only well, has been destroyed. Slavery, the condition of our laborers, was found incompatible with "the soirit of the age,"-not, we honestly and sincerely believe, because it was not adapted to the negro. or because proven to have been unjust to him; not because it has been shown that the negro was not as comfortable or as contented under it as the peasantry of any other age or country. No, these reasons all weighed as nothing. The abolition of slavery was demanded because our enemies could not endure the galling idea of the Southern planter being better off than themselves. Whether or not his condition was thus enviable is not to the present purpose. Slavery fell under the ban of modern philanthropy, the greatest of tyrants and blindest of bigets. With true Mahommedan zeal, dined out he was always accompanied by his ser- she called on fire and sword as her ministers, and vant, who stood behind his chair and signalized to saw her efforts rewarded with the same gratifying iccess as the early apostles of the Islam.

General In order to live, people must eat, and in order to BRADLEY JOHNSON, JOSEPH H. BRADLEY and I'. eat they must work—be they black or be they white; and how to work to advantage, under the new order of things, is now the great problem of these States. This question is of vital importance to the farmer, the mechanic, the merchant, the hanker, and the politician,-for upon its proper solution depends our very existense. Whether or not our Representatives shall be permitted to take their seats in Congress; whether the President shall be impeached, and the Supreme Court reorganized; whether our present State government shall be subverted and give place to territorial rule, all these are questions of the greatest significance to us, but they yield, in the universality of their application, as well as in the degree of inbest work together, cultivate the land, and pro-

The season was had and seeing but little prospect of making a good crop he became discouraged, careless of his own as of his employer's interest. Disputes, bickerings, quarrels and law suits were the consequence. The Freedmen's Bureau, having its ramifications in every part of the country, necessarily exercised an injurious influence upon the labor of the State. Slavery is dead, Requiescat in pace; but the ne-duce food for the people? The problem is complicate and difficult, but not new. Slavery has been abolished in other countries (though perhaps nowhere with the same suddenness and recklessness to consequences as was the case here), and a chaos, as far as regards social economy, has been the result in every instance. It is one of those events in the narration of which history cannot be said to be philosophy teaching by example. A repetition of instances affords us no useful experience. The evil in every case has had to work its own unaided cure. We believe that, considering all the circumstances, we have nothing to complain of. Our citizens have become reconciled to the "new order," at least as much so as could be reasonably expected. When

LARGEST CIRCULATION .- The DAILY | it is better to endure the ills we have, than fly to others we know not of. Human nature is everywhere the same; men are the same in Florida and gest that the freedmen should consider whether they could not do better among the people they have known all their lives, and in the country, where all their friends and relatives reside, than by going to strangers, in a strange land.

We shall advert to the subject again at an early MR. STEVENS' BILL .- We print to-day the Bill of Mr. THADDEUS STEVENS, proposing the establishment of "Republican Governments in the lately rebellious States,"-the meaning of which is to upset our present State Governments and establish new ones, based upon universal suffrage and "great moral ideas." Quite a debate took place in the House of Representatives on Wednesday upon this Bill, which seems to have developed a split in the Badical ranks. Mr. BINGHAM, of Ohio, one of the leading Radicals of the House, denounced the Bill as one for destruction, instead of reconstruction, and as tending to effect disunion instead of reunion. Our Washington exchanges inform us that his speech made a considerable stir among the Radicals. Other prominent Republicans followed upon the condition of the Union and in denunciation of the Bill. Notwithstanding this, however, it is more than probable that it will be
